GAMES THAT ARE DIFFERENT SUGGESTED FOR VALENTINE DAY PROGRESSIVE PARTIES

If you are tired of bridge and [illegible] for your Valentine party announcement and at the same time want a "progressive" party here is one with a bit of variety in it.

The party is planned for boys and girls, but will work out successfully for all girls.

In place of number mark each table with a symbol of St. Valentine—cupid, heart, arrow, A full set darts, true lover's knot, moon, violets and forget-me-nots. Then instead of tally cards each guest draws one of the cupids, hearts, and so forth, four of each kind being provided. Two men and two girls will have cupids, and so on through the list. Then the players sit to the table marked with their insignia to start the games.

Each table is arranged for a different game.

Jack-Straws

The cupid table is supplied with the game of Jack-straws. When the straws are dropped in their pile a tiny cupid is placed, standing, on top. The game is played as usual but when cupid is overthrown the player who does it is counted out. The pile is then remade. The first player who overthrow cupid remains at the table and the other two progress to the next table and take two tiny red hearts pasted to their cards.

The next table is supplied with a shallow pan or bowl of fine white sand. The sand must be damp enough to hold tiny hearts on firm stiff red cardboard in an upright position. There is a small hole in each heart. Each player is given a rod with a line and a hook—these used in an old fish-pond game can be used—and invited to fish for the hearts. The two players "catching" the most hearts are given the tiny red hearts on their cards and progress to the next table.

Throwing Hoops

The table marked with the quiver of darts, or just a golden arrow, is arranged for the old-fashioned game of throwing hoops—with a difference. A gilded arrow is securely fastened to a small gilded block. Each player is given a handful of small red enfolded rings and the two who throw the most rings over the arrow progress and receive their hearts.

At the table adorned with the blue ribbon lovers knot, each player receives six or seven inches of half-inch blue ribbon. All players are blind-folded. The two who tie their hosts first progress. The one who ties the ribbon the most difficult is the last.

The rose table is supplied with a basket full of rose leaves cut from rose-pink crepe paper. Each player has a letter printed on it in gilt. Each player gathers a small handful of petals and begins to form the words Saint Valentine. Unused letters may be put back in the basket, the player helping himself to more petals. The players who complete their words first progress.

At the violet table each player is given a pencil and paper and told to make as many different words as possible from the letters in the word "violet." The two who have the most words progress to the next table.

Rhyming

The forget-me-not table gives the guests an opportunity to express themselves in true Valentine fashion. The "markings," above with pasts, for valentines are given the contestants, but they must compose their own verse. The two persons finishing first progress.

The bottom can ring a bell as the signal for progression, allowing not more than ten minutes for play between bells.

If supper partners are to be chosen it is fun to stretch a cretonne across a wide double-doorway, having the bottom of the curtain twelve or fourteen inches from the floor. Have only one door for the curtain showing. Each pair of feet is numbered. Cut the numbers from a big calendar, paste them on cardboard, and stand them in front of the curtain. Then each man chooses the feet he prefers, with their number, and matches his partner when the girls appear from back of the curtain.

Prizes can be given to the man and girl who have progressed the oldest, while those who have served the fewest number of times can be "consoled."
